AUGUSTUS SAINT-GAUDENS.

"You can do anything you please. It's the way it's done that makes the difference."—Augustus Saint-Gaudens.

¶ Augustus Saint-Gaudens, by birth half French and half Irish, by nature and training American, came to this country at his mother's breast in 1848 when six months old. His father, Bernard Paul Ernest Saint-Gaudens, was born in the little village of Aspet in the south of France. There he learned his trade of shoemaker, and thence he slowly travelled by way of Paris and London to Dublin, Ireland, where he met his future wife, Mary McGuiness, who bound slippers in the shoe store for which he made boots. On arriving in New York this hot-headed, eccentric Frenchman, to the detriment of his trade, developed infinitely more interest in organizing Fraternal Societies than in selling shoes. Consequently from the first, Augustus Saint-Gaudens, the third of five sons, took part in the family struggle for a livelihood.

¶ Until the age of thirteen the youngster received the ordinary education of the New York boy of 1850. Those were the days of lickings at the hands of his teacher, and of fights with the West Broadway "gang;" and the struggle with these elements shaped the energy which lasted him through life. Yet despite his prosaic surroundings his artistic inclinations took shape early. They originated with the representation of soldiers upon a school slate. They emerged through charcoal-scrawled drawings upon the neighboring walls. And finally they were recognized by Dr. Rea Agnew, a customer of Bernard Saint-Gaudens, who found such merit in the young man's sketches that he urged the father to continue his son's education in this direction.

¶ In consequence the boy was apprenticed to a hard-tempered man named Avet, one of the first stone cameo cutters in America, who led Augustus a miserable life for the next few years. At the same time the boy entered the drawing school of the Cooper Institute. There he studied evenings until, in 1864, he revolted at the ill nature of his employer, and, upon being discharged, obtained a position with a more kindly master, Jules Le Brethon, and at about the same time left the Cooper Union to work from the life in the National Academy of Design.

¶ This period of Saint-Gaudens' youth passed in the excitement of the days of the Civil War. From his window he looked down upon the New England Volunteers marching along Broadway, in the city squares he witnessed the recruiting; and these sights, combined with a glimpse of Lincoln driving through the city, stirred his blood with that strong but restrained patriotism which finally he fused into his monuments of Farragut, Lincoln, Shaw, Logan and Sherman.

¶ But the New York life came to an end in 1867, when his father made possible for him a trip abroad. The young man went at once to Paris, where, though still earning his living by cutting cameos, he studied first at the Petite Ecole and later under Jouffroy in the Ecole des Beaux Arts. His master at that time led a revolt against the bloodless classicism of the period. Yet as the teacher never gave radical vent to his theories, so through later life the pupil tempered by a steady restraint his desire for individual expression.

¶ In Paris Saint-Gaudens, a cheerful, athletic youth, made his two great friends who stood close to him all his life, M. Paul Bion and M. Alfred Garnier. Because of their friendship he nearly enlisted in the French army when the war with Prussia broke out. But a tearful letter from his mother changed his plans, so that instead he went to Rome, where, for about four years, he struggled with poverty and debts in his efforts to complete his training. At last, however, the cameo-cutting brought him a few lucky commissions from the family of Mr. Montgomery Gibbs, and gave Saint-Gaudens an opportunity to finish his first statue of "Hiawatha," to execute his first ordered monument, a figure of "Silence," and to go back to America with some prospect of definite work.

¶ The young man's career in the United States did not stretch out before him immediately in any such straight and easy manner as he may have expected. First one hope and then another fell through, though an occasional small task like that of the relief of Mr. D. Maitland Armstrong came to his hands. But at last, after steady persistence, he obtained the order for the Farragut statue now in Madison Square, New York. From that day his position was assured, and soon he secured the opportunity to aid Mr. John LaFarge by modelling the sculpture for that painter's scheme of "Angels Adoring the Cross" in St. Thomas' Church on Fifth Avenue. So then, after founding the Society of American Artists with a number of other young men, and after his long-delayed marriage to Miss Augusta F. Homer, he went back to Paris to carry out his work.

¶ There in Paris he completed the Farragut and the Adoring Angels, though these larger commissions did not represent the only important step which he took at the time. He had long been interested in the subject of Renaissance reliefs and medals, such as those by Pisano, and Mr. LaFarge had already urged him to try his hand at like efforts. Accordingly, here, at last, he found an opportunity to begin upon a series of medallions, which, through life, he developed with marked interest, among them those of Mr. William Gedney Bunce, Mr. Charles F. McKim, Mr. George W. Maynard, and especially that of M. Bastien Lepage.

¶ At last, with the completion of the Farragut, Saint-Gaudens definitely returned to New York to take up his well-established career as an American sculptor. For a time he lived in the Sherwood Studios at the corner of 57th Street and Sixth Avenue. But soon he found a building at 148 West Thirty-sixth Street which he altered to his taste. There he continued to model for the next fifteen years, starting with the angels for the tomb of Ex-Governor Morgan, a monument which was burned in the cemetery while in process of carving.

¶ Here, too, in the Thirty-sixth Street studio, Saint-Gaudens gathered about him the friends of his life; such men as Mr. Stanford White, Mr. Charles F. McKim, Mr. Joseph Wells, and Mr. Thomas W. Dewing. Here Mr. H. H. Richardson, the Boston architect, brought Bishop Phillips Brooks whenever the two men visited New York, giving the sculptor the opportunity of meeting the preacher, a monument to whom was to be one of his last completed works. And here, as a boy to study art and to sweep the floors, came Frederick William MacMonnies.

¶ Saint-Gaudens had always been a lover of the theatre and of music. Now he found others who resembled him in their enthusiasm. Therefore, first this group, as well as Mr. Francis Lathrop, formed the habit of going to a little beer saloon on the East side of Broadway, opposite Washington Place, to listen to programmes furnished them by the peculiar combination of a violin, a clarinet and a piano. Then they employed the musicians to come on Sunday afternoons to the Thirty-sixth Street studio. And, a little later, they developed more ambitious concerts, which were held there weekly during the winters, while the studio remained in Saint-Gaudens' hands.

¶The intimacy with Mr. Richardson, which sprang up rapidly, led to Saint-Gaudens receiving the order for the monument to Colonel Robert Gould Shaw, which stands in front of the State House in Boston. On first consideration, the artist planned a modest relief, but, during the fourteen years devoted to it, the composition became a labor of love which consumed more of the sculptor's energy than he ever put into any other commission. The work upon the scaffolding before the Shaw during the hot summers, with scarcely a pause to eat an apple for lunch, undoubtedly hastened the breakdown of Saint-Gaudens' health. Yet, on the other hand, the monument furnished him with much amusement—an amusement which he invariably obtained from his art—both through the antics of the horse which posed for him, and through the very difficulties he encountered in hiring negro models, who persisted in believing the studio to be the den of a devil of vivisection.

¶Along in this early period, too, came the Lincoln for Chicago, provided for in the will of Mr. Eli Bates, and the relief of Dr. James McCosh for Princeton, New Jersey. In the case of the Lincoln the committee first asked Saint-Gaudens to compete. But upon his refusing, according to his principle, he received the order outright and eventually produced the gaunt, thoughtful figure now so well known.

¶The statue to Deacon Samuel Chapin, popularly known as "The Puritan," followed the Lincoln. It has since acquired especial interest, as in 1903 the New England Society of Pennsylvania commissioned the sculptor to make for Philadelphia a variation of the first work, and so therein Saint-Gaudens obtained one of his few opportunities of modifying his earlier efforts in accordance with his later ideas. The head he changed from the round Gaelic face of Chapin to a long New England profile, more typical of the austere forefather, while the folds of the cloak, the Bible and the base, he also altered to an extent.

¶After the Chapin statue, Mr. Henry Adams ordered the figure for the Rock Creek Cemetery in Washington. In giving the commission, Mr. Adams would only suggest that Saint-Gaudens consult with Mr. LaFarge, who thoroughly understood Mr. Adams' oriental thoughts. Therefore, the sculptor carried out his task as well as he could with the advice of the painter, and ultimately, it seems, satisfied the wishes of Mr. Adams. Though there have been a variety of names accorded the result, Saint-Gaudens rarely expressed himself on the subject.

¶During this time, while engaged upon the Rock Creek figure, Saint-Gaudens, at the suggestion of his friend, Mr. C. C. Beaman, first visited Cornish, New Hampshire. There, soon afterwards, he bought an old brick tavern, which he altered into a summer home. And there, sixteen years later, he went to live permanently, much to the benefit of his last days.

¶About that date also, in 1887, the sculptor met Robert Louis Stevenson through Mr. Will H. Low, an intimate mutual friend. The author and the sculptor at once admired one another, and the medallion, which has since assumed so many forms, Saint-Gaudens modelled in the Hotel Albert in Eleventh Street, Stevenson propped up in bed and his wife reading aloud. Only five sittings of two or three hours apiece could be obtained then, though later Saint-Gaudens had further opportunity when Stevenson lived at Manisquan, New Jersey.

¶Shortly after this Saint-Gaudens set at modelling the figure for the "Smith" tomb in Newport, Rhode Island, from which he developed the better-known "Amor Caritas." The first variation is now in the Luxembourg, Paris, while a second stands as a memorial to the daughter of Dr. S. Weir Mitchell in St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia.

¶In 1892, when the idea for the World's Fair had reached definite form, Saint-Gaudens, at the invitation of Mr. Daniel H. Burnham, went to Chicago with Mr. Richard M. Hunt, Mr. Charles F. McKim and others, as one of the Committee on the laying-out of the grounds. This was about the first of a long series of like tasks which the sculptor undertook through his life, hoping in such a way to aid the cause of art in his country. Mr. Burnham desired that Saint-Gaudens model a share of the sculpture. But the latter had so many calls upon him that he gave his personal attention only to the figure of Columbus in front of the Administration Building, which he carried out with the able assistance of Mrs. Francois M. L. Tonetti, then Miss Mary Lawrence, and to the Exposition Medal, of which he designed the obverse. Upon the reverse of the Medal he originally modelled a nude boy, which raised a feminine hue and cry. At first he tried to satisfy this in a number of ways, but failing, he relinquished the attempt in disgust.

¶The statue of Peter Cooper now took the place of the Rock Creek Cemetery figure upon the scaffolding behind the Shaw relief, which seemed almost a fixture. On the top floor of a large stable in Twentieth Street, the sculptor began one monument to General Logan for the Lake Front in Chicago, and another to President James A. Garfield for Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. While in a third and smaller studio, Saint-Gaudens modelled the horse of the Sherman from the famous high jumper Ontario, began the figure for the Sherman Victory from the woman whom he always considered to be the handsomest model he had ever seen, and finished with great interest his bas-relief of Mr. William Dean Howells and his daughter, Miss Mildred Howells.

¶Before turning from his life in New York, mention should be made of Saint-Gaudens' teaching at the Art Students' League. His work there held a firm place in his thoughts. Again and again in later years he said regarding it that he always had felt surprised to see that for the most part women learned more readily than men, and that they copied what stood before them with greater facility, but that in the end the men made the further progress and composed and created to more purpose.

¶During these last years, however, the sculptor's nervousness increased startlingly through overwork. Also he became anxious to compare what he had done with the sculpture recognized in Europe. So, as the unveiling of the Logan and the Shaw allowed him to shift his studio paraphernalia, he left for Paris in October, 1897. There he hired a studio in a quiet, garden-like alley at 3 bis Rue de Bagneux, where he remodelled the Sherman cloak, the figure of the Victory and variations of the Stevenson for St. Giles Church in Edinburgh, and where he began his studies for the figures of the Boston Public Library.

¶For some time Saint-Gaudens seemed unhappy and neurasthenic. But after a trip to his father's birthplace with his old friend M. Alfred Garnier, he returned in better spirits and took up his life in Paris and his intimacy with Dr. Henry Shiff and those others he had known so well in younger days. He said later that the three men who to him stood out before all the rest at that time were James MacNeill Whistler, Paul Dubois and Auguste Rodin. Saint-Gaudens regarded Paul Dubois' Joan of Arc as one of the greatest statues in the world. But Whistler in person most attracted the sculptor. For the painter came often to the studio in the evening and chatted with his usual wit, or accompanied Saint-Gaudens and his friends to their dinner at Foyot's, an old cafe opposite the Luxembourg. So with such surroundings, with the gay life of the Parisian spring, with the benefit of a trip or two in Spain, and with the success accorded him by the French after his exhibitions in Paris, he regained his buoyancy, until suddenly he learned that he was ill and must go home.

¶ Saint-Gaudens' return to America in 1900 marked the last period of his life, a period which he spent for the most part in Cornish, New Hampshire. There he completed, besides lesser commissions, his monuments to Sherman, Lincoln, Brooks and the Caryatids for the Albright Art Gallery in Buffalo; and there he renewed his thoughts upon the groups to go before the Boston Public Library. At this time, too, his attention turned more than ever before toward helping the cause of American Art. Two objects in especial interested him to a tremendous extent. One was the founding in Rome of the American Academy to be devoted to the Fine Arts, much in the same manner as the Villa Medici School has been devoted by the French Government. The other was the artistic development of the National Capitol at Washington; where, in connection with the Park Commission, he spent much time and gave the best of his assistance in criticism and advice toward establishing on an even firmer basis the beauty of that city. Luckily, although ill, he continued his work for longer than expected, because of his life in the open air. Skating, skeeing and golf he kept up while his health held out. And, at last, when he no longer could walk, he would sit by the hour upon one of the porches, or he would have himself carried from studio to studio in an improvised Sedan chair.

¶His first serious occupation lay in the completion of the Sherman monument, which he modified from the model exhibited in Paris, studying the bronze after it had been set up in the field back of the house and changing it even then. On the Sherman, also, he gratified his ambition to follow the example set by the statue of Marcus Aurelius on the Capitoline Hill in Rome and to gild an equestrian monument. For, as he expressed it, he was "sick of seeing statues look like stove pipes."

¶Second in importance to him, he had by him in his studio the studies for the Boston Public Library Groups, constantly turning over the question of their development. One pedestal would have borne four figures symbolic of Executive Power, Law and Love. Upon the other base he planned three figures of Science,

Labor and Music. For his own purpose, the studies were ready to be completed, and if he had lived he would have finished them in short order. They had long been upon his conscience. Yet to him the problem seemed so difficult, since the figures were to stand where they would force themselves upon the Library visitor, that he felt unwilling to carry them through until freed from financial considerations or the limitations of ill health.

¶The "Crerar" Lincoln, also for Chicago, was the next vital commission which he set to work upon after the Sherman, and therein he carried out his old desire of representing the President seated. The first Lincoln had been a standing figure of Lincoln the Man, and now, by way of contrast, he wished to represent in addition a seated Lincoln the Head of the State. Therefore, to accomplish the purpose fittingly, he took up one of his series of endless experiments with four-foot models, composed in varying ways, and with full-sized painted paper representations of the entire composition erected out of doors. The monument is yet to be unveiled, but it went to the bronze founder some time before the sculptor's death.

¶Another statue which Saint-Gaudens attacked with zest at virtually this same time, was of Charles Stuart Parnell, for Dublin, Ireland. The artist took interest here, because, as he often remarked, he had enough Irish in his make-up to appreciate the character of his subject. It is a peculiar coincidence that as few photographs of Parnell could be found, the sculptor turned to a series of caricatures published in Punch and like papers during Parnell's trial. So the very sketches drawn to attack the patriot ultimately came to be used in his honor.

¶At this time, also, among his lesser commissions, Saint-Gaudens completed such busts as that of the Honorable John Hay and such reliefs as those of Mrs. C. C. Beaman, Justice Horace Gray, the Honorable Wayne MacVeagh and his wife, and Justice and Mrs. Stanley Matthews. Probably the commission for the MacVeagh family absorbed him the most. The sculptor had often dwelt upon the strong magnetic power of the female sex as contrasted with the domination of the masculine intellect, and therefore here delighted in giving rein to his theories. Yet all portraits held his attention, since he thoroughly enjoyed the peculiarities of his sitters, attempting habitually to shift his mental attitude to that of the person beside him, whether it was a hypersensitive woman or a rugged man.

¶It seems especially unfortunate, in view of his ill-health, that upon the night of October eleventh, 1904, his chief studio should have burned to the ground, not only with all the sculpture in progress, but as well with most of his portfolios containing the records of forty years. But he bravely set about recovering his lost ground, and before long had his commissions again well under way.

¶Soon after this fire he returned to the Brooks monument which he had studied since 1901, and which he carried so far that only mechanical enlargement and casting were needed for its completion at the time of his death. As finished, the figure of the preacher stands to the front of an architectural canopy. His left hand grasps a Bible that rests upon a lectern, his right hand is raised in a gesture of emphasis, while the swing of the gown and the direct look from the head gives an atmosphere of energy and motion. Behind the Brooks, and against a cross that rises by his side, is a figure of Christ, half shadowed, veiled, reposeful, who touches the preacher on the shoulder with His right hand as if inspiring the words to be spoken. The complete monument Saint-Gaudens reached through his usual succession of alterations. In his first efforts he had an angel with the Brooks. Then he designed two figures of the Christ in relief. And only after much thought did he decide to make this ideal figure in the round. ¶ Saint-Gaudens' work now drew to its close, and his final tasks included solely the designs for three of the United States coins, the Caryatids for the Albright Art Gallery, and the bas-relief of his wife.

¶ The coins he undertook at the suggestion of President Roosevelt. But the confusion of the carrying out of this commission often made him regret that he had entered upon it. Finally, however, after a discussion which lasted over a year and a half, it was settled that the Cent should exhibit a profile head on one side and lettering alone on the other; that the Ten Dollar gold piece should carry the same head with shifted inscriptions and a standing eagle; and that the Twenty-Dollar gold piece should show a full length figure of Liberty and a flying eagle. The flying eagle Saint-Gaudens developed from the bird on the 1857 white cent. The standing eagle he re-altered from a design he had used on such works as the Shaw Memorial, the Roosevelt Inauguration Medal and the shield of the Garfield Monument. Seventy or more models of the bird were to be seen in the studio waiting for the casual visitor to name his preference. The profile head Saint-Gaudens modelled in relief from an unused bust for the Sherman Victory, while the full length Liberty he rendered from a scheme he had long had in mind. It is most unfortunate that the mint did not notify the sculptor when they abandoned the thought of a new design for the Cent, as thereon he wasted precious hours; while the placing of the motto "In God We Trust," on the gold coins by other hands than his, will still further mar a composition which has already suffered greatly in the process of reproduction.

¶The Caryatids, his final large commission, absorbed him to a tremendous degree and marked his ultimate tendency to draw away from the decorative in favor of the monumental. As the building they were to adorn is large and reposeful, the sculptor wished to reflect these qualities. First he considered having winged figures. Then he believed it might be well to place garlands in their hands. Next he originated the scheme wherein the four central Caryatids held lettered tablets, those on the ends carrying palms. Finally he decided to place palms in the hands of the ones on the corners, while the middle figures should bear objects which denoted Architecture, Painting, Sculpture and Music.

¶The relief which he made of Mrs. Saint-Gaudens was the last work which he touched with his hands. The composition diverted him greatly, as he could work on it while seated. But his death came before he could finish it.

¶During the last few years Saint-Gaudens was ill for much of the time, yet whenever pain left him for a few hours, his courage and his hope returned and he constantly repeated to his friends that life became more and more worth living as each day passed.

to

By GLENN BROWN

¶Augustus Saint-Gaudens, the great artist of the age, was a charming companion, a true friend, and a citizen leading to ideal life. His affable manner, quiet humor, quick appreciation, broad culture, and perfect taste made his companionship sought and enjoyed. A sympathetic, candid nature and high aspirations made his friendship earnestly desired. His unselfish assistance to committees, institutions, and the government has been a guiding factor toward purity of taste and nobility of life.

¶His thorough equipment, sincerity of purpose, grasp of composition, knowledge of detail, understanding of mass, natural genius, brilliant imagination, and poetic nature, combined with infinite patience, untiring energy, and effacement of self, have produced the greatest sculpture of the age.

¶His artistic light shines in refined low relief and bold monumental composition. The relief portraits of Robert Louis Stevenson and Justice Gray are exquisitely delicate, harmonious, restful, dignified, and beautiful. Portrait bust have attained a new dignity in his hands. The busts of John Hay and David J. Hill, while full of repose and individual expression, possess high sculptural value.

¶He has made single figures impressive, something rarely accomplished. The Puritan, a work of art in line and pose, vividly typifies the honest, untiring, unbending energy of the Reformation. Farragut stands alert, prepared for any emergency, serious, as the destiny of the fleet depends upon his action, commanding, endowed with life and art. Lincoln, a hopeless model in the hands of other sculptors, is a great work of art as depicted by the mind and wrought by the hand of Saint-Gaudens. Lincoln's kindly nature, brotherly love, honesty of purpose, clear and far-seeing vision, grave with the destiny of the nation, firm in the salvation of the Union, are shown in these wonderful pieces of portrait sculpture.

¶Our admiration of Saint-Gaudens' genius reaches the highest point when we study his great compositions with their wonderful restrained movement, full of life, yet dignified and statuesque; natural, but glowing with imagination, poetry and inspiration. The Shaw Memorial is a great composition in relief, ideal in its sense of movement, natural in its depiction of types, and imaginative in its expression of sentiment. A spiritual figure which inspires the group to deeds of bravery and self-renunciation makes this memorial a brilliant and satisfactory combination of the ideal and real. The Sherman statue, guided by the spirit of victory and peace, vividly portrays the sense of motion—positive, resistless, forward motion. This is one of the great compositions of the world, full of realism, imagination and poetry, happily combined, graceful in all its lines, dignified and imposing, restrained and beautiful.

¶It is fitting that Saint-Gaudens, one of the immortals, should have conceived the poetic, mysterious, and elevating figure of immortality which rests calmly for evermore in Rock Creek Cemetery, an expression of his genius, imagination, poetry, and eternal fame.

MODELLED BY AVG. SAINT-GAVDENS
PARIS MDCCCLXXIX-MDCCCLXXX.

Lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Cast made by permission of Commissioner of Parks, Borough of Manhattan.

Note. The original monument stands at the northeast corner of Madison Square Garden, New York City. The stone pedestal forms a semicircular seat, divided by the pier upon which the figure stands, and terminating at either end in carved dolphins. Upon the central pier is a symbolic sword, plunged down through the waves which flow across it and over two seated female figures carved in low relief at either side. The seat is raised three steps from the level of the park, and the space about its foot is paved with pebbles in which a bronze crab is sunk. The inscription which completes the decoration of the stone seat-back reads in part as follows:

DAVID GLASGOW FARRAGVT. THAT THE MEM-ORY OF A DARING AND SAGACIOUS COMMANDER AND GENTLE GREAT-SOULED MAN WHOSE LIFE
FROM CHILDHOOD WAS GIVEN TO HIS COUNTRY
BY WHO SERVED HER SUPREMACY IN THE WAR

ABRAHAM LINCOLN (STANDING

Plaster cast from bronze statue, signed and dated 1887. Heroic size. Standing before a chair, figure directed to the front, head slightly bent, right arm thrust behind him, left grasping lapel of coat, left foot advanced, in an attitude characteristic of Lincoln when rising to make a speech.

Signature

AUGUSTUS SAINT-GAUDENS
SCULPTOR
MDCCCLXXXVII.

Lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Cast made by permission of the Commissioners of Lincoln Park, Chicago.

Note. The original statue stands at the south end of Lincoln Park in Chicago, the idea of an audience-chamber being further carried out in the great circular stone exedra, sixty feet across, which surrounds the low pedestal, in the design of which Mr. Saint-Gaudens collaborated with the late Stanford White, architect. The inscription is on the pedestal and back of the exedra, and includes among other things an extract from the Cooper Union speech of 1860: LET US HAVE FAITH THAT RIGHT MAKES MIGHT, AND IN THAT FAITH LET US TO THE END DARE TO DO OUR DUTY AS WE UNDERSTAND IT.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

Plaster cast from rectangular bronze memorial tablet in Saint Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, Scotland; low relief, signed and dated 1887-1892. H. (of relief proper) 5 ft. 7 in., (of plinth) 1 ft. 10 in.; W. (of relief proper) 9 ft. 1½ in., (of plinth) 9 ft. 2 in. A variant of the same design, the figure being the same, but shown in full length, covered with a traveling rug in place of the coverlet, having a quill pen in hand in place of the cigarette, and resting upon a couch in place of the bed, with leaves of manuscript scattered upon the floor, and instead of the ivy border, extending across the top and drooping at sides of the relief a garland of laurel interwoven at the ends with Scotch heather and Samoan hibiscus. The outline of a ship is shown in the lower right corner.

Inscription

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

Bronze circular medallion, low relief, signed and dated 1887. D. (vertical) $35\frac{3}{8}$ in.; (horizontal) $34\frac{1}{2}$ in. Similar in design and inscription to the model described under No. 39, but differing as follows: Foot of bed and lower quarter of figure not visible; ivy border and verses of inscription made to conform to the circular shape of the medallion. Instead of dedication "To Robert Louis Stevenson," etc., the present example reads: REPLICIA MADE FOR CHARLES DEERING BY HIS FRIEND AVGVSTVS SAINT-GAVDENS. ASPET MCMVI.

Signature (below poem)
AVGVSTVS SAINT-GAVDENS.
MDCCCLXXXVII.

Lent by Mr. Charles Deering.

Note. The "dedication" varies with the name of the recipient, and the earlier replicas differed in minor details of modelling.

A bronze reducton is in the Luxembourg.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

Electrotype reduction from the model of the relief as originally designed; in rectangular form; signed and dated New York, September, 1887. H. $6\frac{5}{8}$ in.; W. $13\frac{1}{2}$ in. Full-length figure, seen in profile, looking left, reclining in a bed, the lower limbs partly concealed by the coverlet; the left hand holding a manuscript, the knees being drawn up to support it, and the right hand poised in air, with a cigarette between the fingers. A border of ivy leaves and berries extends across the top of the plaque, with the inscription and signature written horizontally below it, the figure of the winged horse occurring between the first two stanzas of the inscription.

Inscription (Stevenson's poem beginning)

YOUTH NOW FLEES ON FEATHERED FOOT

THE HEAD OF THE FIGURE ON THE ADAMS MONUMENT

This head was in the studio of Mr. Augustus Saint-Gaudens when everything was destroyed in 1904, with the exception of this head and the portrait of his son, Mr. Homer Saint-Gaudens. "The Adams Monument head was especially notable that dreary morning after the fire, when there was absolutely nothing else left standing or saved."

Lent by Mrs. Augustus Saint-Gaudens.

ADAMS MONUMENT, ROCK CREEK
CEMETERY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Plaster cast from bronze statue, unsigned and undated. [About 1891.] A figure, enveloped in heavy drapery, which covers the head and body with the exception of the face and right arm, the hand of which supports the chin. Directed to the front, eyes lowered.

Lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Cast made by permission of Mr. Henry Adams.

Note. The monument consists of a block of granite against which the figure leans, and which forms one side of an CARYATIDS FOR THE ALBRIGHT ART GALLERY, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Plaster casts of four Caryatids for the Albright Gallery in Buffalo. There are to be two porticos on the exterior of the Albright Art Gallery. Each portico has four Caryatids. The one exhibited has corner figures bearing palms and wreaths. The two central figures are symbolical of Sculpture bearing a winged victory, and Painting holding a palette and brushes. On the corresponding portico, the corner figures bear palms and wreaths. The central figures are symbolical of Architecture bearing a Corinthian capital, and Music holding a lyre. They are about 7 ft. 7½ in. in height and stand about 8 ft. above the floor level. These figures are among the last pieces modelled by Mr. Saint-Gaudens and are now to be carved in marble for the portico.

Lent by Mr. J. J. Albright.

SIX CIRCULAR RELIEFS IN PLASTER

Head of a woman, in profile, with parted lips; directed left; wearing olive wreath. Above, thirteen stars. In exergue: LIBERTY. D. 11⅞ in.

Note. Unused design, originally intended for one-cent piece.

Similar to the preceding, with Indian head-dress substituted for olive wreath, and with margin of relief lowered. D. $11\frac{3}{4}$ in.

Note. Design for obverse of ten-dollar gold piece.

American eagle, standing; arrows and olive branch in claws. In upper right field, inscription: . E . PLURIBUS . UNUM. Legend: . UNITED . STATES . OF . AMERICA. Exergue. . TWENTY . DOLLARS. D. $12\frac{1}{2}$ in.

Note. Design intended for reverse of the twenty-dollar gold piece, but used for the ten.

Full-length figure of winged woman, standing, directed front; flowing hair, Indian head-dress, classic robe; torch in right hand, olive branch in left; left foot raised on a rock against which is an oak branch. In the lower left field a small sketch of the Capitol building, with rising sun; lower right field, MCMVII. Border of forty-six stars. Signature at lower left, monogram A ST G. Edge beveled. D. $12\frac{1}{2}$ in.

Note. Original idea for obverse of twenty-dollar gold piece.

Similar to the preceding, but without wings or head-dress for the figure; Capitol building enlarged, rays of sun lengthened and extended across from left to right. Border of stars nearer center, leaving wider margin. Signature: In lower right field, monogram A ST G. Edge: Thirteen stars with legend E . PLURIBUS . UNUM. D. $12\frac{1}{8}$ in.

Note. Design for obverse of twenty-dollar gold piece.

PORTRAITS OF SAINT GAUDENS

130

PORTRAITS OF SAINT-GAUDENS PORTRAIT OF AUGUSTUS SAINT- GAUDENS BY KENYON COX, 1908

Life size, half-length figure, seen from the back, head in profile, directed right; right arm extended, hand engaged in modeling, left holding a lump of clay and a modelling tool.

Signature

KENYON COX 1908.

Lent by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Note. The original picture was painted, on a smaller scale, in the sculptor's Thirty-sixth Street Studio in 1887. It was destroyed in the fire in his studio in Cornish, N. H., in 1904. This replica was painted in 1908. The sculptor is represented at work upon the relief portrait of William M. Chase. Behind his head, to the left, is a solar print of one of the Vanderbilt caryatids. A cast of the "Unknown Lady" of the Louvre stands beyond. Next is the bronze relief of Homer Saint-Gaudens as an infant, and beyond that the plaster relief of Miss Lee. The scaffolding behind the easel is the back of the Shaw Memorial. [Signed] KENYON COX.

131

PORTRAIT OF AUGUSTUS SAINT- GAUDENS BY HENRY HERING

HAND OF AUGUSTUS SAINT- GAUDENS

Bronze cast from plaster cast in the possession of Mr. George W. Maynard. The original cast was made to assist Mr. Maynard in representing a hand holding a flag for one of the figures in his painting entitled "1776," now owned by Smith College.
Lent by Mr. Daniel C. French.

A PHOTOGRAPH OF AUGUSTUS SAINT-GAUDENS AT ABOUT SEVENTEEN YEARS OF AGE

Lent by Miss Lucille A. Le Brethon.

Note. The following is a transcription of an explanatory letter addressed to the Secretary of the Saint-Gaudens Memorial Exhibition by Miss Lucile A. Le Brethon:
I am in receipt of your letter of the 17th, and delayed answering, as I wished to procure from my niece, Mrs. Arnold Moser, 214 East 15th Street, a topaz cameo, the very first piece of work made by Augustus Saint-Gaudens under my father's tuition. The onyx cameo which I am also sending you for exhibition is one of the last things made by him while with my father, Jules Le Brethon. There can be no doubt of the authenticity of these two cameos (which my father always kept and prized very much), as the accompanying photograph shows him at work in my father's studio. I am sending the two cameos and photograph under separate cover by registered mail.
